Elephants are smart animals. A new study shows that African elephants can call each other by their names. This is special because only a few animals, like dolphins and parrots, can do this. Professor(教授) Michael Pardo from Cornell University(大學) studied elephants in Kenya(肯亞). He recorded their sounds and found that elephants use a special noise, "rumble", to call each other. Each elephant has its own rumble, much like having its own name.

When an elephant hears its name, it answers quickly. This shows that elephants know when another elephant is calling them. This study helps us understand how elephants communicate with each other. Elephants are not just big animals; they are very smart, too.

Upside-down houses are fun places to visit because everything inside is upside-down. The floor becomes the ceiling, and the ceiling becomes the floor. At first, people feel strange because the house is at an angle, but later they are OK and start taking pictures. Visitors like to lie on the "ceiling" to look like they are flying or hold a chair or a bed to pretend they are floating.

There are many upside-down houses around the world. The first one is in Poland, and people must climb through a window to enter it. In the US, there is an upside-down White House with a famous room, the Oval Office. Taiwan also had a three-floor upside-down house before. It had a car hanging in the air. These houses can let people see the world in a different way. Isn't it fun?
